Tugs took the Mayflower to a shipyard in East Boston, where she arrived with a considerable list to port. The crash caused intense excitement among the hundreds of women and children, who had been spending the day at the beach, and there was a the gray hulk of the submarine standing close by, with the navy-yard tug Iwra, which reached the scene a minute after the collision. NUMEROUS OTHER TUGS

Fortunately, numerous other tugs were close enough to reach the steamer's side within a short time, and the passengers quickly calmed down and awaited the arrival of a steamer summoned from Boston by radio. The Rose Standish, another of the fleet of the Nantasket Beach Steamship Company, reached the disabled Mayflower between Spectacle Island and Long Island. The transfer of passengers was carried out in an orderly manner.

a political storm in England for several weeks. After a trip to Russia in lanes. June, where he conferred with the Russian Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' delegates, he advised the British labor conference to send delegates to the International Socialists' Conference at Stockholm. The labor conference voted in accordance with Henderson's advice, thereby reversing its policy. Considerable feeling was aroused in England last month when Mr. Henderson went on a mission to Paris with the pacifist, James R. Macdonald and George J. Wardle, acting chairman of the Labor party in the House of Commons, and a number of Russian delegates. The purpose of the journey was to confer with the French Socialists regarding the proposed conterence of entente allied Socialists in London and the subsequent international conference at Stockholm. His action aroused great irritation among the members of the British Parliament and this was increased when A. Bonar Law admitted that the trip had been made without the knowledge of the British government.

After hearing Mr. Henderson's explanation of his mission, which strongly emphasized his views that the proposed conference at Stockholm should be merely consultative and not in any way binding, and Premier Lloyd George's defense of Mr. Henderson actions, press critics of the Labor leader still remained dissatisfied, and rumors that he would be forced out of the Cabinet flew thick and fast.

Mr. Henderson started life as a molder and has been a member of Parliament since 1903. In March of the present year, Mrs. Alice Wheeldon, her daughter, Mrs. Winifred Mason, and the latter's husband, Alfred George Mason, were found guilty of conspirlag to murder Mr. Henderson and Premier Lloyd George by means of poison.
